This study aimed to prospectively analyze the indications for active surveillance (AS) and radical prostatectomy (RP) in patients with prostate cancer (PCa). In a prospective noninterventonal study, 240 consecutive patients diagnosed with clinically localized PCa were followed-up for at least 3 years. All patients with a Gleason score of 6 and 7 were allocated to AS, whereas patients with a Gleason score of 8 and 9 and a PSA value less than 10 ng/mL were allocated to RP. A total of 148 patients (62.5 %) were included in the AS group, and 92 patients (38.5 %) were allocated to RP. Fifty-one patients (20.4 %) developed an incident of PSA relapse, and 13 (5.4 %) developed metastatic disease. Ninety-one patients (36.1 %) had post-RP complications. PCa is a heterogeneous disease, and the development of an oncologic castration-resistant state is associated with a poor outcome. In patients with clinically localized PCa and a PSA level less than 10 ng/mL, AS is associated with a lower incidence of disease progression and death than RP.1. Field of the Invention The invention relates to a process for producing a mastic made of a rubber-like elastic polymer and to a polymer product made from such a mastic. More particularly, it relates to a mastic having improved low temperature flexibility and excellent light transmittance. 2. Description of Related Art Mastic is used as a sealant and adhesive in, for example, glazing. Mastic is essentially a mixture of mastic resin (polymer) and an additive. The additive can be a liquid, for example, an organic solvent, or a solid, for example, silica. The expression "rubber-like elastic polymer" is used here in an inclusive sense to denote an elastic polymer which is subject to partial cross-linking.
