“HyperMotion Technology was inspired by the high-intensity movement and pace of modern-day football,” said Miles Jacobson, Executive Producer. “With it we’re able to create a broader range of player behaviours and more realistic moment-to-moment action.” Specific changes in the game include: Improved dribbling system – Players now have the ability to move more on their left and right foot, and more accurately stop and change direction on the ball while dribbling. When the ball is trapped, players will attempt a more direct dribble, or use a through ball instead of looking for a cross or a simple chip. New free kicks – Players now have greater awareness of when to place a free kick, and players can now aim their free kick further and also more accurately direct the shot when they’re in a position to finish. Players will also increasingly pass and finish with their right foot and head. Fighter jets – Players can now engage in more aerial duels, and apply more damage from ground duels as well as from aerial duels. Players will now use the wall more intelligently and will often use the wall when trying to split open a defence. Box-to-box players – Players are more aware of the offside line and players are now less inclined to shoot from outside the box. Improved off-ball defender AI – Defenders now use their skills in pressing and tackling, and more intelligently use positions to win possession. Tackling system – Players will attempt to tackle more intelligently to force mistakes, and will more reliably follow through tackles. Improved player stability – Players will more accurately fall and jump correctly, and tackles will remain more stable when players are hit from behind. Melee clashes – Players will be more aware of their positions on the pitch and will use the wall more effectively to shield them when fighting for space. Improved ball physics - Players will more easily push or knock the ball past opponents. Players will also more aggressively take the ball past opponents on the run. Players will also make more precise, accurate throws and the ball will feel more responsive when players are moving. Players will more intelligently pass the ball to teammates while defenders are occupied. Improved ball positioning - Players will more intelligently use the wall and opponents to make a play or to shield the ball from opposing defenders. Players will more intelligently pass the ball to teammates, even when they are
