as stated above, it is not a good idea to listen to headphones when you are driving, but some noise-canceling headphones actually reduce the effects of noise around you. they are designed to be worn inside the ear and work by reproducing the sounds that you would hear normally, but they cancel the external noise. they do not work the same way and do not cancel the noise coming from the headphones and speakers. the bug for iphone and ipod touch was introduced in the ios 4.3.2 update. this bug fixes an issue where certain radio stations would no longer display properly on your iphone or ipod. devices released in 2011 and later are not affected. an iphone allows the user to check their text messages and return phone calls even if the phone is locked. this feature is sometimes called slide to unlock, even though they do not slide at all. instead, the user turns a switch, usually under the phone on the center console or dashboard, to turn on the phone. another factor that can cause crackling is the cables. if the cable is too thin, it may not provide enough protection to the speaker. if the cable is too thick, it may cause a lot of noise. you can use a caliper to measure the thickness of the speaker cable. you can also use a continuity tester to test the cable's resistance. if the resistance is too high, it may also cause crackling. you can connect the input and output terminals of your car audio unit to the speakers and the power supply terminals to the power source. to avoid crackling, you must ensure that the connections are connected properly.
